

Bio

Jeffrey Killman is an associate professor of Spanish at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, where he teaches graduate courses on legal translation, legal interpreting, scientific and technical translation, and translation technologies. He completed his PhD in Translation Studies at the University of Málaga. He also holds a legal translation and interpreting certificate from the University of Castilla-La Mancha and is state-certified as a Spanish court interpreter. His research centers mostly on legal translation and translation technologies, and his publications have appeared in various edited volumes and journals including Babel, Perspectives, the Journal of Internationalization and Localization, and Translation and Interpreting Studies. He is co-guest editing a special issue of Llengua i Dret/Language and Law on legal translation and interpreting in the digital age and currently serves as the vice-president of the American Translation and Interpreting Studies Association (ATISA).

Statement

I am honored to be nominated to continue serving as Vice-President of the Executive Committee of ATISA, to which I have remained dedicated over the years. Through ATISA and its venues, I have consistently encountered high levels of scholarship, engagement, collegiality, and advocacy for the profession. I am very excited about our newly designed website <https://atisa.org/>, which I had an instrumental role in making happen. The new website includes a revamped image and a series of features and tools that our old website did not incorporate. I am optimistic that this new infrastructure will allow us to engage more with Members. I would look forward to the opportunity to explore ways in which this new technology will allow us to do so in more robust ways than in the past. I would also look forward to contributing to the Association's efforts to organize a biannual conference and summer school opportunities. I believe I have the background and experience necessary to continue serving the Association as Vice-President, and it would be a privilege to continue working with the President, Board, and Members to continue supporting the study of translation and interpreting in the U.S.
